

Eurozone inflation data due today

Investor sentiment continued to hold a risk averse tone yesterday. The Euro Stoxx 50 shed 1.7%, while the S&P 500 closed down 0.9%. On bond markets, yields continued to move sharply lower across the board. The decline on stock markets and the fall in yields reflected the increasing concerns of a recession. As a result, market expectations for the peak in official rates were scaled back by circa 15-25bps in the US, Eurozone and the UK.

Currency-wise, quarter-end rebalancing contributed to choppy trading conditions yesterday. The euro was on the defensive against the dollar and sterling throughout the European session. EUR/USD fell below the key $1.04 level, and EUR/GBP traded to a low of 85.5p. Overnight though, the euro recouped its losses. Elsewhere, the yen rose by over 1% versus the euro and the dollar.

Meanwhile, US core-PCE inflation slowed for a third consecutive month. It fell to 4.7% in May (vs. 4.8% f'cast). Elsewhere, US personal consumption rose by 0.2% in May (vs. +0.4% f'cast), while the April data were revised lower to +0.3% from +0.7%. This follows a substantial downward revision in consumer spending in Q1 also, indicating that inflation has been weighing on household spending by more than previously thought.

In level terms, the main pairs start today at almost identical levels to 24hrs ago. EUR/USD opens in the upper half of $1.04-1.05. EUR/GBP is operating just above 86p. Meantime, GBP/USD is changing hands below the midpoint of $1.21-1.22.

Looking ahead, the main release of note will be Eurozone flash HICP inflation for June. Both the headline and the core rate are forecast to rise to 8.4% and 4.5%, respectively.
