

Inflation data in focus today

There was a subdued tone to investor sentiment yesterday. This was evident in the main equity indices being in sideways mode for much of their respective trading sessions. At the closing bell on Wall Street last night, the S&P 500 index was flat on the day. On bond markets, in the lead up to the French parliamentary election on Sunday, there was a noticeable widening in the 10-year French/German yield spread. It moved out to 82bps.

Data-wise, there was a busy flow of releases yesterday. The Eurozone EC sentiment indices for June painted a similar picture to last week's PMIs, indicating some softening in activity at the end of Q2. Across the Atlantic, while headline US Durable Goods orders printed ahead of expectations, the underlying details were less encouraging from a business investment perspective. The data though did not appear to have much currency market impact.

Overall, from a currency viewpoint, yen weakness remained the dominant theme. USD/JPY rose to a new 38-year high at ¥161.27. This will increase speculation that Japanese authorities will be forced to intervene again to support the currency. Elsewhere, the other FX majors operated within narrow ranges. EUR/USD was straddling the $1.07 level, while EUR/GBP continued to trade near the midpoint of 84-85p. GBP/USD remained in the lower half of $1.26-1.27.

There is an inflation theme to today's macro diary. In the Eurozone, we get flash HICP inflation readings for June from France, Italy and Spain. Meanwhile, in the US, we get the Fed's preferred inflation gauge- core PCE for May. With central banks very much in data dependent mode and a particular focus on inflation metrics, today's releases do pose some event risk for their respective currencies.
