

President Trump's Inauguration in focus

Risk appetite improved throughout last week, amid some positive inflation data, newsflow indicating a more gradual approach to potential US trade tariffs and a softening in market rate expectations. Against this backdrop, the Euro Stoxx 50 gained 3.4% last week, while the S&P 500 rose by 2.9%.

Data-wise, UK CPI for December printed a touch below the consensus. Similarly, US core-CPI came in below expectations for December, while the headline rate matched the forecast. The data coincided with a softening in futures contracts. Current pricing is now for circa 40bps of rate cuts in the US this year (compared to 25bps last Monday). Meantime in the UK, pricing now suggests there is an 80% chance of a rate cut in February, and 60bps worth of easing priced-in by year end (vs. 70% and 50bps last week).

Amid the softening in market rate expectations, the improvement in risk appetite and following some dovish remarks from central bank officials, most notably Fed Governor Waller, bond yields declined across the board last week. US and UK sovereign yields fell by 10-20bps, while German Bund yields decreased by a more modest 5-10bps.

On the currency front, the dollar handed back some of its recent gains last week. This sees EUR/USD open this morning at the $1.03 mark. Meantime, EUR/GBP is in the lower half of the 84-85p band. Elsewhere, GBP/USD is operating just north of the $1.22 level.

Turning to the week ahead, the key focus of a holiday shortened week in the US will be the inauguration of President Trump today. Elsewhere, the January flash PMIs for the main advanced economies and UK labour market data will garner attention.
