ECB in focus this week

There was a mixed mood on financial markets last week. In the US, some strong Q2 company earnings reports and solid/better than anticipated data releases helped lift the S&P 500 0.6% higher. In contrast, some disappointing earnings reports in the Eurozone and the threat of potential 30% tariffs on EU exports to the US, weighed on the Euro Stoxx 50, which registered a 0.5% fall for the week.

On bond markets, US Treasury and German Bund yields moved slightly lower last week. However, in the UK, Gilt yields rose by 3-8bps along the curve. The move coincided with a modest firming in UK rate expectations, on the back of some sticky inflation data for June and decent labour market figures for April/May.

Currency-wise, the dollar was on the front-foot once again for most of last week. This saw EUR/USD probe below $1.16 and GBP/USD test below $1.34. However, reports that Fed Chair Powell may be removed from his position sparked some brief volatility, and saw the dollar depreciate sharply in the middle of last week. After the reports were quashed though, the dollar re-took the ascendancy.

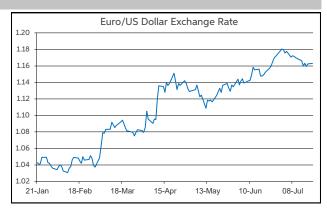

In level terms, EUR/USD opens today back in the lower half of the $1.16-1.17 range. GBP/USD is just above the $1.34 threshold. Elsewhere, EUR/GBP is in and around the midpoint of the 86-87p corridor. USD/JPY starts the week just above ¥148.

Turning to the week ahead, the main highlight will be the ECB policy meeting. The Governing Council is widely expected to leave rates on hold, meaning the focus will be centred on the meeting statement and the press conference for any policy guidance. Data-wise, the flash PMIs for July in the Eurozone, UK and US will feature. A slew of other important national survey data in the Eurozone, and updates on the UK consumer in the form of retail sales (June) and confidence (July) are also due.
