

Fed cuts rates by 25bps

As expected, the US Federal reserve cut rates by 25bps for a second consecutive meeting. However, the FOMC decision was not unanimous once again. One official (Schmid) preferred to leave rates unchanged, while another (Miran) voted for a 50bps cut. Overall though, the meeting statement was little changed from the September update. At the press conference though, Chair Powell struck a somewhat hawkish tone, stating that a rate cut in December "is far from assured". The Fed also announced it will end QT.

Against this backdrop, market rate expectations firmed slightly. Current futures pricing indicates the market sees around a 70% chance of a 25bps rate cut in December, down from circa 90% previously. Meantime, US rates are now seen as troughing near 3% next year. Elsewhere, US Treasury yields rose by 7-10bps along the curve in the aftermath of the press conference.

In the run-up to the Fed policy announcement yesterday, investors kept their powder dry. This was reflected by quiet trading throughout the European session. Overall, the Euro Stoxx 50 finished flat for the day. Benchmark European bond yields were little changed also.

Currency-wise, the dollar has edged marginally higher overnight. Earlier in the day, sterling remained on the defensive. This saw EUR/GBP peak at 88.18p, its highest level since early May 2023. GBP/USD also tested below the $1.32 handle. As trading gets underway this morning, EUR/GBP is at the 88p threshold. Meantime, GBP/USD is in and around the $1.32 mark. EUR/USD is in the lower half of $1.16-1.17. Meantime, USD/JPY starts the day above ¥153, following the BoJ decision to leave policy on hold in the early hours of this morning.

Today, the monetary spotlight will be on the ECB. A third successive hold is widely expected. A slew of Eurozone data, including GDP (Q3) and the unemployment rate (Sept) are also due.
