

Dollar remains well underpinned

Risk appetite remained subdued yesterday as Covid-19 cases continued to rise. The Euro Stoxx 50 edged lower for the 6th day running, while the S&P 500 finished close to flat. On the currency front, the dollar continued to hold the upper hand.

This was against the backdrop of US core-PCE inflation rising to its highest level in 30 years, at 4.1% in October. There was also a slew of strong results from various activity metrics. This included, Q3 GDP being revised slightly higher to 2.1% q/q (2% previously). Meanwhile, both consumption and personal income came in 0.3% above the consensus, at 0.5% and 1.3% in October. The latest weekly initial jobless claims declined to 199k from 268k as well. The dollar was also underpinned by the softer tone to risk appetite.

From a euro perspective, the only release of note yesterday was the German Ifo. As expected, the index fell for the 5th month in-a-row in November. Elsewhere in Germany, the coalition of the SPD, Greens and FDP agreed to form a government. However, the euro reaction to the announcement and the data was limited.

The firmer tone to the dollar was reflected in the currency gaining circa 0.5% throughout the European session. This saw, EUR/USD fall to a low of $1.118. Overnight though, despite a more hawkish bias to the Fed minutes, the dollar handed back some of its gains. EUR/USD opens this morning just above the $1.12 mark. GBP/USD is operating at the midpoint $1.33-1.34. Meantime, EUR/GBP continues to straddle 84p.

Ahead today, the release of the ECB meeting minutes will garner some attention. However, a market holiday in the US for Thanksgiving suggests it could be a quieter day on markets.
