BoE meeting provides event risk for sterling

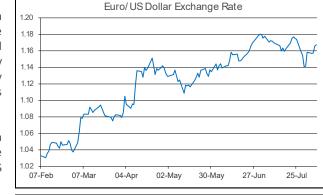

Investor sentiment was holding a positive tone yesterday. This was evident in gains on the main equity indices on both sides of the Atlantic. In Europe, the Euro Stoxx rose by 0.3%. Meantime, at the closing bell last night on Wall Street, the S&P 500 was 0.7% higher. The 'risk-on' tone occurred amid a very sparse data diary. The US macro calendar was blank. Meanwhile, the only highlight from the Eurozone schedule was retail sales for June. Headline sales rose by a less than expected 0.3% in the month (vs. f'cast for 0.4%).

Despite, the very quiet day in terms of data releases, we did get some action on currency markets. The dollar lost ground to the other majors, including the euro and sterling. The greenback was not helped by a challenging 10-year US Treasury auction as well as dovish comments from a number of Fed speakers.

In level terms, the weaker dollar stance over the past 24 hours is reflected in EUR/USD opening this morning in the upper half of $1.16-1.17 and GBP/USD trading above the midpoint of $1.33-1.34. At the same time, the euro has registered some gains against sterling in the lead up to today's BoE meeting. EUR/GBP starts the European session up at 87.3p.

Looking ahead to today, the aforementioned BoE policy announcement is in focus. This provides some event risk for sterling. A 25bps rate cut is expected, with the market attaching around a 95% probability to this outcome. This would see the official UK interest rate reduced to 4%. A key point of attention for market participants is what guidance, if any, is forthcoming from the BoE regarding additional rate cuts. In this regard, the updated macro forecasts contained in the Monetary Policy Report, the meeting minutes (including voting breakdown) and Governor Bailey's press conference will be closely scrutinised. Futures contracts are currently pricing-in UK rates falling to 3.75% by year end.
