

Dollar recovers some of its losses

The risk-off tone to investor sentiment from last week carried through to yesterday, as investors continued to digest the potential impact of the US tariffs. Trading conditions were also quite volatile, amid on-going tariff related headlines. Most notably, the White House quashed a report that it is considering a 90-day pause on the tariffs, and stated that it will impose additional tariffs on China, if it does not withdraw retaliatory levies on US goods.

Against this backdrop, the Euro Stoxx 50 shed 4.5% yesterday. However, the S&P 500 fell by a modest 0.2%. On bond markets, US Treasury yields moved sharply higher, rising by 15-25bps. The move coincided with a marked firming in US interest rate futures. Current pricing is for circa 95bps of easing this year, compared to 120bps previously. UK Gilt and German Bund yields also moved higher, albeit not to the same extent, owing partly to a less aggressive hardening in euro/sterling rates. It should be noted though, that Asian equity indices rebounded somewhat overnight.

Currency-wise, the dollar recouped some of its losses from last week. Meantime, sterling was on the defensive, while the yen and Swiss franc moved back from their recent highs. In level terms, this sees EUR/USD open this morning in the top half of $1.09-1.10, having started the week above $1.10. GBP/USD is operating down in the $1.27-1.28 corridor. Elsewhere, EUR/GBP is in the top half of 85-86p. USD/JPY is above the midpoint of ¥147-148.

Turning to the day ahead, tariff related news flow will continue to be front and centre on markets. Data-wise, the only release of note will be US small business optimism for March. Meanwhile, on the monetary policy front, speeches from a number of ECB, Fed and BoE officials will garner some attention.
