

FX markets remain confined to tight ranges

Risk appetite continued to firm yesterday as investors returned from a long weekend in the US. The Euro Stoxx 50 moved higher for the second consecutive day, rising by 0.7%. Meanwhile, on Wall Street, the S&P jumped by 2.4%, having shed circa 6% last week. On bond markets, benchmark sovereign yields remained relatively range bound across the board.

On the currency front, the main FX pairs continued to operate within confined ranges yesterday. Of the limited moves to register the dollar was on the defensive as risk appetite improved. Overnight though, the greenback recouped all of its losses. Elsewhere, the Japanese yen was under some downward pressure, falling to a new 24-year low, above ¥136 versus the dollar. This occurred amid push back from government officials against calls for the BoJ to end its ultra-loose monetary policy.

As trading gets underway today, EUR/USD has edged back closer to the $1.05 threshold. Meanwhile, EUR/GBP continues to operate in the top half of 85-86p. Elsewhere, GBP/USD is changing hands in the lower half of the $1.22-1.23 trading band.

In terms of data releases, already this morning UK CPI inflation data has printed in-line with the consensus, edging up to 9.1% in May. Core-CPI eased to 5.9% from 6.2%, slightly below the 6% reading anticipated. Sterling has been unreactive to the release.

From a dollar perspective, Fed Chair Powell's semi-annual testimony to both Houses of Congress starts today and will garner close attention. Meanwhile, from a euro viewpoint flash consumer confidence for June is forecast to improve slightly, albeit from very low levels.
