Geopolitics spurs market moves

Global risk aversion prompted some significant moves on currency markets over the last 24 hours. This largely reflected the news that the US is to impose fresh economic sanctions on Russia and the uncertainty over the potential implications of this. Concerns over possible contagion effects (primarily in Europe) from risks around the stability of the Turkish financial system, as the value of the Turkish lira continued to plummet, have also impacted FX markets.

The geopolitical developments sparked some safe-haven demand for the dollar, yen and Swiss franc. The headlines around Turkey have seen the euro fall back, with media reports that the ECB is concerned about the exposure of some Eurozone banks to the country.

In level terms, the firmer dollar and softer euro have seen EUR/USD fall from around $1.16, through its key $1.15 support, to open this morning at $1.146. This is its weakest level since July 2017. GBP/USD has moved below its modest support at $1.28, changing hands at its lowest level since June 2017. The EUR/GBP pair is currently trading near 89.5p.

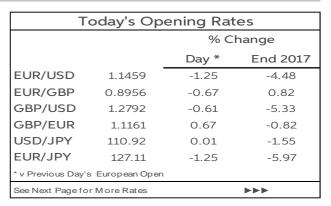

Turning to the day ahead, the main data release is the first reading of UK Q2 GDP. Quarterly growth is expected to have improved, with a 0.4% rise forecast (vs 0.2% in Q1). Although, given the lagging nature of the data, as well as the on-going uncertainty over Brexit, potential sterling impact may be limited.

Dollar-wise, US CPI inflation for July is due out. With no change in underlying price pressures expected, the data seem unlikely to have much impact on the US currency. Overall then, FX markets may continue to be driven by geopolitical considerations today.
