Quiet FX market action

There was a generally cautious mood to market sentiment for much of yesterday. Although some positive news in relation to progress on a US stimulus package helped the S&P 500 edge higher (+0.3%) on Wall Street last night. Meanwhile, the main currency pairs traded within narrow ranges.

This was partly due to the fact that the macro data diary was sparse and lacking in any top tier releases. One of the few highlights was the German ZEW for December. The headline reading came in ahead of forecasts, but as expected it did not have any influence on the euro's performance.

On the Brexit front, the talks on a trade deal remained deadlocked around the key issues of fisheries, the level playing field and governance. However, in separate talks, the UK government did agree to the implementation of key aspects of the previously signed Withdrawal Agreement, including the special NI protocol.

From a currency perspective, the lack of any new developments on the trade deal has seen the key sterling pairs confined to tight ranges. In level terms, this is reflected in EUR/GBP continuing to trade in the upper half of 90-91p. Meanwhile, GBP/USD starts today just above the midpoint of $1.33-1.34. Elsewhere, EUR/USD has held onto its position above $1.21, with the pair changing hands this morning in the lower half of $1.21-1.22.

Today's macro data calendar is once again very quiet. Therefore, both the euro and dollar could struggle for direction. For sterling, the currency remains sensitive to EU-UK trade talk newsflow. In this regard, the meeting later today between UK PM Johnson and EC President von der Leyen will be closely followed. John Fahey, Senior Economist, AIB
