

More positive tone to risk appetite

After the previous day's sharp falls, the focus yesterday was very much on equity markets. Amid a quieter day in terms of new developments in the US-China trade dispute, the major global indices managed to post some gains. At the closing bell last night on Wall Street, the S&P 500 was up 0.8% on the day.

Meanwhile, on the currency front, the action was once again confined to relatively limited ranges. From a sterling viewpoint, yesterday's batch of labour market updates for Q1 was somewhat mixed in tone. The unemployment rate fell unexpectedly to a new 45 year low of 3.8%. However, employment missed to the downside of forecasts, while underlying wage growth printed in line with expectations. Overall though, the data had minimal impact on sterling.

As trading gets underway this morning, the dollar is exhibiting some modest gains against both the euro and sterling over the past 24 hours. This is reflected in EUR/USD hovering down near the $1.12 level. Meanwhile, the combination of a slightly firmer dollar and slightly softer sterling sees GBP/USD at the $1.29 mark. Elsewhere, EUR/GBP has edged up closer to 87p.

Ahead today, the main interest from a macro data perspective will be centred on the US. The highlight of a busy schedule will be retail sales for April. The market will be assessing this data for early indications that the key consumer sector started Q2 with some upward momentum. If the data suggest this, then it could provide some support to the dollar today.

Aside from the data, general market sentiment remains sensitive to any new developments in the US-China trade dispute. Meantime, Brexit newsflow remains a potential source of influence for sterling.
