Brexit newsflow continues to dominate

The focus of financial markets yesterday remained centred on Brexit developments. Last night, a sufficient number of MPs failed to back PM Johnson's motion calling for a general election on December 12. Meanwhile, the EU granted the PM's request for an Article 50 extension until January 31st. The UK can leave earlier if the Withdrawal Agreement is ratified by Parliament.

Sterling reaction was limited. Its main pairs have stayed near to their recent levels. EUR/GBP is operating in the lower half of the 86 -87p band, while cable (GBP/USD) is trading near to the midpoint of the $1.28-1.29 range.

Elsewhere, the action was generally muted. A relatively sparse macro schedule, with goods trade data in the US the only release of note, meant there was little to provide direction. As a result, EUR/USD has spent the last 24 hours trading in a tight range close to the $1.11 level.

Turning to the day ahead, sterling watchers will continue to keep a close eye on Westminster. The UK government has again moved to call an election for December 12. However, the fresh approach only requires a simple majority of MPs to support it. There is a growing expectation that the bill may pass with the support of the SNP and/ or the Lib Dems, though there is some disagreement about the election date. Sterling could prove sensitive to developments, but it will likely remain within its relatively limited recent trading range.

Meanwhile, the data schedule is once again uninspiring and is unlikely to be a source of direction for FX markets. We do get the Conference Board measure of US consumer confidence for October, but the release is unlikely to have any dollar impact.
