

FX majors remain within relatively narrow ranges

There was a generally more muted tone to investor sentiment for much of yesterday. This followed a few days of gains on equity markets, especially on Wall Street, with the S&P 500 registering new record highs. This rally has been underpinned by optimism that the conflict in the Middle East could be resolved sooner rather than later.

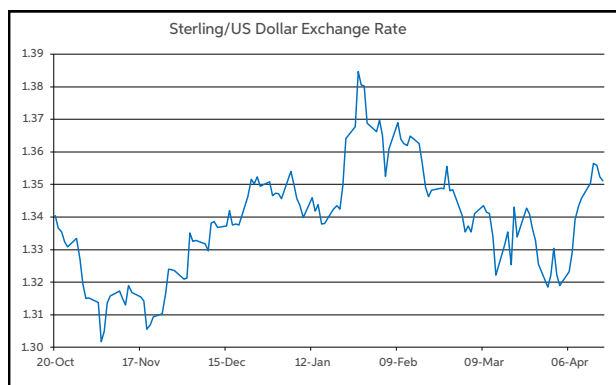

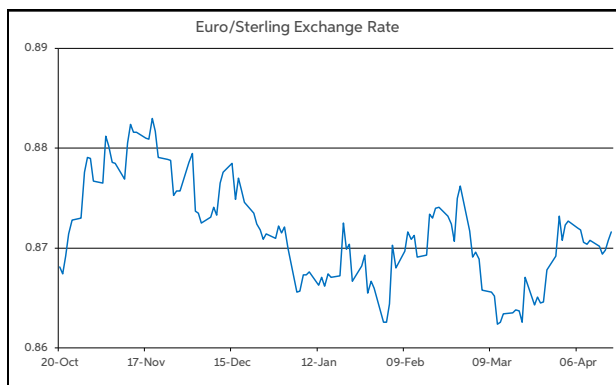

Some renewed upward pressure on oil prices yesterday may also have acted as a headwind for risk appetite. Brent Crude rose around 5%, moving back up to $99 per barrel. In terms of macro data, there was a relatively busy US diary yesterday. Overall, the results were a bit mixed, but not a significant dial mover for markets.

The more subdued trading was evident in the performance of the main equity indices. In Europe, the Euro Stoxx 50 was down marginally on the day (-0.1%). Meanwhile, at the closing bell on Wall Street last night, the S&P 500 was modestly higher, rising by 0.3%.

On the currency front, the majors were once again confined to narrow ranges. This pattern has continued in overnight trading. The dollar has been slightly firmer over this 24-hour period. In level terms, the EUR/USD pair has been unable to sustain the $1.18 mark, while GBP/USD is changing hands at the lower end of the $1.35-1.36 corridor. Meanwhile, USD/JPY has regained the ¥159 mark. Elsewhere, the action in EUR/GBP has remained uneventful. The pair continues to operate in and around the 87p handle.

Looking ahead to today, investors will continue to keep a close eye on developments in the Middle East. Comments from the White House have suggested that a second round of direct talks between the US and Iran could occur over the weekend. Today's macro data diary is very sparse.
