

Chair Powell's final press conference in focus

The cautious mode on markets at the start of the week persisted yesterday, as peace talks between the US & Iran failed to materialise once again. Against this backdrop, oil prices continued to climb higher, with Brent gaining almost 3%, moving above $111 per barrel in the process. Amid the further rise in oil prices, the Euro Stoxx 50 fell by 0.4%. Meantime on Wall Street, the S&P 500 declined by 0.5%.

Elsewhere, market interest rate expectations firmed somewhat due to the further rise in oil prices, which is contributing to ongoing concerns of higher inflation. A hawkish voting split (6-3 to hold, compared to 8-1 previously) from the BoJ also likely contributed to the modest hardening in interest rate futures contracts. Firmer rate expectations placed some upward pressure on sovereign bond yields, with 2-year German Bund and UK Gilt yields climbing by 5-8bps yesterday. The equivalent US Treasury yield rose by 3bps.

However, the action on currency markets has remained moribund over the past 24 hours. The main FX pairs have been contained to quite tight ranges. Of the muted price action to note, the dollar has edged slightly higher. Meantime, the yen has handed back some of its gains registered in the initial aftermath of the BoJ policy decision.

In level terms, EUR/USD opens this morning back at the $1.17 mark, having tested below that threshold yesterday. GBP/USD is down near the $1.35 handle. Meanwhile, EUR/GBP is changing hands in the top half of 86-87p. USD/JPY is operating up in the top half of ¥159-160.

Looking ahead to today, the monetary policy spotlight will be centred on the Fed FOMC meeting outcome. The Fed is widely expected to leave rates on hold but remarks from Chair Powell, at what is now very likely to be his last FOMC press conference, will garner close attention. Developments in the Middle East and a slew of corporate earnings reports from large tech firms will also be in focus.
