Focus turns to Jackson Hole

The cautious mood on markets persisted yesterday. For a second consecutive day the Euro Stoxx 50 fell by 0.2%. Meanwhile the S&P moved 0.4% lower. On bond markets, benchmark sovereign yields rose by 4-5bps. The move in yields coincided with a slight firming in market rate expectations across the board. Rate expectations firmed amid some hawkish remarks from Fed officials and solid PMI data for August. The announcement of a formal trade deal between the EU and US had no major impact on markets yesterday.

The flash PMIs in the Eurozone, UK and US printed broadly ahead of expectations in August. In the Eurozone, both sectors came in just above the key 50 mark. Meanwhile, in the UK, the services PMI jumped to 53.6 (vs. 51.8 f'cast), although the manufacturing reading was a touch softer than anticipated. In contrast, the US manufacturing PMI surged to 53.3 (vs. 49.5 f'cast) while the services sector also remained comfortably in expansion mode. Meantime, Fed officials Schmid and Bostic both noted that further data is likely needed before the Fed will starts to lower rates.

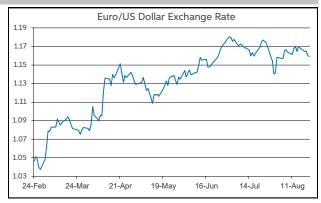

Against this backdrop, the dollar was holding the upper hand on the exchanges. The greenback gained around 0.4% versus the euro and sterling, and rose by 0.7% against the yen. As trading gets underway this morning, this sees EUR/USD open back below the $1.16 mark. GBP/USD is down at the $1.34 handle. USD/JPY is near the midpoint of ¥148-149. EUR/GBP continues at the halfway mark of 86-87p.

Turning to the day ahead, the focus will be on Fed Chair Powell's speech at the Jackson Hole Economic Symposium. Investors will be paying very close attention to his remarks for any guidance on potential rate cuts between now and year end. Current market pricing suggests the Fed may cut rates twice by the end of the year. Elsewhere, today's data schedule is sparse on both sides of the Atlantic.
