

Dollar holding sway

Financial markets experienced some risk aversion last week. Ongoing concerns over the implication of Covid-19 variants and some mixed macro data results weighed on investor sentiment. All the main equity indices suffered losses over the period. On bond markets, some of the main sovereign yields drifted lower (ranging from 2-5bps), reflecting some safe haven demand.

Meanwhile, on the currency front, the dollar was holding the upper hand last week. The currency moved higher in the aftermath of the mid-week release of the Fed July minutes. At the same time, the risk off tone on markets provided further support, due to the safe haven appeal of the dollar. Elsewhere, sterling found itself on the defensive in the second half of the week. There was no obvious catalyst for this, although much weaker than expected UK retail sales data for July were unhelpful to the pound.

In level terms, the firmer dollar is reflected in EUR/USD opening this morning down near to the $1.17 threshold (briefly touched the $1.18 mark in the early part of last week). Meantime, the weakness in sterling is evidenced by EUR/GBP changing hands in the upper half of 85-86p. The combination of a stronger dollar and weaker sterling see's GBP/USD close to the midpoint of $1.36-1.37.

This week, attention will centre on the Jackson Hole Economic Symposium hosted by the Fed and includes a speech from Chair Powell. The gathering poses some event risk for the dollar. The market will be looking to see if the Fed tee's up an announcement for QE tapering at its next meeting in September, which could see the process start by the end of this year or early 2022. Data-wise, the main highlights will be the flash August PMIs from the US, Eurozone and UK as well as US Core PCE inflation figures (July).
