Narrow trading on currency markets

The muted mood on markets persisted yesterday, amid a sparse data schedule on both sides of the Atlantic. Against this backdrop, there was a mixed tone to investor sentiment. The Euro Stoxx 50 rose by 0.3%. Meantime, on Wall Street, the S&P 500 fell by 0.6%.

In terms of fixed income, sovereign yields were little changed across the board. Of the limited moves to note, German Bund yields declined by 2-3bps along the curve. Elsewhere on financial markets, oil prices fell by circa 1% with benchmark Brent crude now back below $79 per barrel.

On the currency front, the main FX pairs have operated in very narrow ranges over the past 24 hours. Amid the subdued price action, the dollar has eked out some minor gains against the euro, sterling and yen. There were no obvious catalysts for the firmer dollar, although month-end flows may have had an impact yesterday.

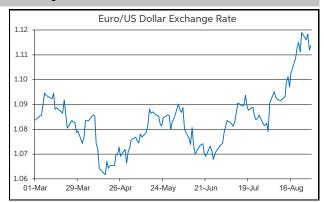

As trading gets underway this morning, the marginally stronger dollar is evidenced by GBP/USD operating down closer to the $1.32 threshold. Similarly, EUR/USD is changing hands in the lower half of the $1.11-1.12 corridor. USD/JPY is up at the midpoint of the $144-145 range. At the same time, EUR/GBP remains in the bottom half of the $4-85p trading band.

Turning to the day ahead, the main focus will be on the flash readings of German and Spanish HICP inflation for August. Both are forecast to move lower in the month. However, barring any major surprises, the data may not impact the euro. Elsewhere, the EC sentiment indices for August are due. From a dollar perspective, the latest weekly initial jobless claims will be released.
