UK Budget boosts sterling

Trading conditions were calmer throughout last week compared to the week prior. A holiday shortened week in the US and a relatively sparse data schedule likely contributed to the quieter week on markets. At the same time, US market rate expectations softened somewhat. Against this backdrop, equity markets recouped some of their recent losses, with the Euro Stoxx 50 rising by 2.8%, while the S&P 500 gained 3.7% last week.

Data-wise, US retail sales and the Conference Board measure of consumer confidence both printed below expectations last week. This contributed to the softening in US futures contracts. Current pricing indicates there is around an 90% chance of a rate cut at the next meeting later this month, up from a circa 60% chance at the start of last week. Elsewhere, the main event of the week, the UK budget, provided little policy to boost productivity but was received well by markets, as the Chancellor increased the fiscal headroom to around £22bn, from close to £10bn.

Currency-wise, the dollar was under some downward pressure, due to the softening in US rate expectations. At the same time, sterling strengthened, amid the positive market reaction to the Budget.

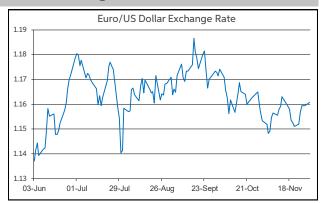

In level terms, this sees EUR/USD open this morning up at the $1.16 threshold. GBP/USD is changing hands above the $1.32 handle, having been below $1.31 last Monday. EUR/GBP is operating in the upper half of the 87-88p corridor. USD/JPY is near the midpoint of the ¥155-156 range.

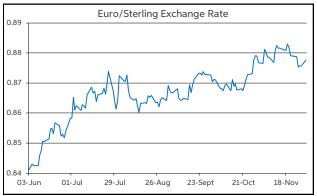

Turning to the week ahead, a busy data calendar in the US includes the September reading of core-PCE inflation. Personal income/consumption data for the month, as well as a slew of US survey data are also due. In the Eurozone, the flash reading of HICP inflation for November will feature.
