

EUR/USD above $1.20 level

The start of December saw a generally optimistic mood on markets yesterday. Sentiment was aided by better than expected macro data out of China as well as positive reports on the timing of the rollout of a Covid-19 vaccine. This 'risk on' mood was evident in all the main equity indices registering gains on the day. At the close on Wall Street last night, the S&P 500 was up 1.1%.

On the currency front, the euro has started the month with some momentum. At the same time, the dollar has been somewhat softer. In a notable move, the EUR/USD pair has moved above the $1.20 mark, trading as high as $1.208, its highest level since H1'2018. There was no specific catalyst for this in terms of Eurozone news. The data calendar was largely uneventful. The final reading of the manufacturing PMI (Nov) saw a slight upward revision, while Eurozone inflation (Nov) printed weaker than expected at -0.3%. For the dollar, the manufacturing ISM (Nov) came in modestly below forecasts, but remained at a solid level. Meanwhile, Fed Chair Powell's semi-annual testimony to Congress did not provide any surprises.

For sterling, reports yesterday that the EU-UK trade talks may be entering the "tunnel" stage of negotiations gave a temporary boost to the currency. The move was not sustained, though, with the euro rising above the 90p level in early trading today ahead of a briefing from Michel Barnier this morning. He is expected to report that a deal still hangs in the balance.

Today's macro calendar is very sparse. Therefore, barring any major Brexit developments, the focus from an FX perspective may centre on EUR/USD and whether it can hold its ground above the $1.20 threshold.
