Very busy week ahead

There was a cautious tone to investor sentiment throughout last week. Against this backdrop, the Euro Stoxx 50 edged 0.1% lower, while the S&P 500 fell by 0.6% on the week. In terms of fixed income, German Bund yields rose by 2-5bps along the curve. Meanwhile, both the US Treasury and UK Gilt yield curves steepened, as short-dated yields fell and long-dated yields moved higher. Elsewhere, oil prices declined by circa 4.0%, with Brent crude oil currently down near $61 per barrel.

The focus last week was on the final Fed policy meeting of the year. As expected, the Fed cut rates by 25bps. However, the FOMC was split on the decision, with three members dissenting, the most in six years. At the press conference, Chair Powell struck a neutral tone. Meanwhile, the median projection in the updated interest rate dotplot remained for just one 25bps rate cut next year. In contrast, the market continues to price in 55bps of rate cuts by the end of 2026.

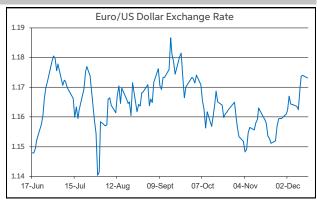

On the currency front, the dollar was on the defensive following the Fed policy announcement. Meantime, sterling was under some downward pressure near the end of the week, following a slight contraction in GDP in October. As trading gets underway this morning, EUR/USD opens in the bottom half of the $1.17-1.18 range. GBP/USD is operating above the midpoint of the $1.33-1.34 band. At the same time, EUR/GBP is changing hands in the top half of 87-88p.

This week, a busy data calendar includes the final policy meetings for the ECB, BoE and the BoJ. The ECB is likely to hold, while market pricing indicates the BoE may cut by 25bps and the BoJ may hike by 25bps, albeit neither outcome is fully priced on. Data-wise, a slew of US updates, including the November labour market report are due. The UK data calendar is also jam-packed, with labour market, inflation and retail sales all due for release. The flash PMIs for December across the main advanced economies will also feature.
