

UK CPI cools in November

There was a cautious tone to investor sentiment yesterday, amid a slew of data releases on both sides of the Atlantic. This was reflected by the Euro Stoxx 50 declining by 0.6%, while the S&P 500 fell by 0.2%. Meantime on bond markets, benchmark sovereign yields were little changed. Elsewhere, oil prices moved sharply lower yesterday but recovered somewhat overnight. Overall, Brent crude oil fell by around 1.5% and is currently down below $60 per barrel.

Data-wise, the main release of note was the US labour market report for November. Non-farm payrolls rose by 64k in the month (vs. 50k f'cast) but the unemployment rate rose to 4.6% (vs. 4.4% f'cast). Meanwhile, US retail sales stagnated in October (vs. 0.1% f'cast), although the control group measure jumped by 0.8% in the month (vs. +0.4% f'cast). In terms of more timely data, the US flash PMIs printed below the consensus but remained in expansion mode in December. Similarly, the Eurozone flash PMIs were weaker than anticipated, whereas the UK PMIs were stronger than expected.

Against that backdrop, the dollar was under some modest downward pressure. However, the greenback recouped its losses overnight, as oil prices moved off their lows. Meanwhile, sterling was holding a slightly firmer tone, amid the better than anticipated PMI data.

In level terms, the firmer tone to sterling is evidenced by EUR/GBP opening this morning back in the lower half of the 87-88p range. GBP/USD is operating in the $1.33-1.34 corridor, having traded above the $1.34 mark yesterday. Elsewhere, EUR/USD is changing hands near to the $1.17 threshold.

Already this morning, UK CPI data for November have been released. Both the headline and core rates printed below the consensus, at 3.2%. Later today, the final reading of Eurozone HICP is set to confirm that headline inflation rose to 2.2% in November.
