

Tariffs, BoE decision, US payrolls in focus this week

The weekend announcement of tariffs by the Trump Administration on Mexico, Canada and China kept markets busy yesterday. Trading conditions were volatile as investors reacted to the ebb and flow of tariff newsflow. As the day progressed though there were some encouraging developments in US discussions with both Mexico and Canada.

From a currency viewpoint, the dollar started the day on the front foot. EUR/USD fell to a low of $1.021 and GBP/USD was down at $1.225. However, the dollar saw a reversal of fortunes amid positive news of delays to tariffs in relation to Mexico and Canada. This is reflected in EUR/USD opening this morning back at $1.03 and GBP/USD trading at the $1.24 threshold.

Looking ahead, tariff/trade related developments are likely to keep investor's minds occupied this week. Overnight, there has been news of retaliatory tariffs from China. In terms of scheduled macro events/releases, it's the turn of the Bank of England to hold its first policy announcement of 2025 (Thursday). The meeting poses some event risk for sterling. After keeping rates unchanged in December, the market is attaching around a 90% probability to a 25bps rate cut from Threadneedle Street. This would see the Bank rate reduced to 4.50%. The BoE will also be providing more detail on its economic outlook with the publication of its latest Monetary Policy Report and accompanying press conference.

The main data highlight over the coming days will be US centric, with Friday's raft of labour market metrics due. This includes the January payrolls number. The consensus forecast is for a 170,000 increase, which would match the Q4 2024 average. The unemployment rate is expected to hold steady at 4.1%.
