

Flash PMIs headline a busy data schedule today

Amid a more cautious tone to investor sentiment yesterday, equity markets on both sides of the Atlantic handed back some of their recent gains. Overall, the Euro Stoxx 50 declined by 0.7%, while the S&P 500 fell by 0.3%. Elsewhere, oil prices rose by circa 2%, as tensions between the US and Iran remained in focus, amid ongoing talks. Brent crude oil is back above $71 per barrel, which is near to its year-to-date high.

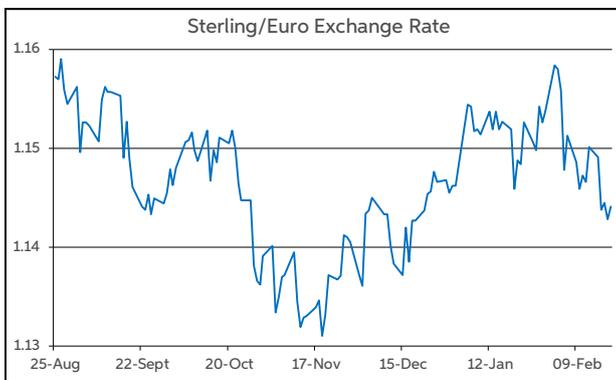

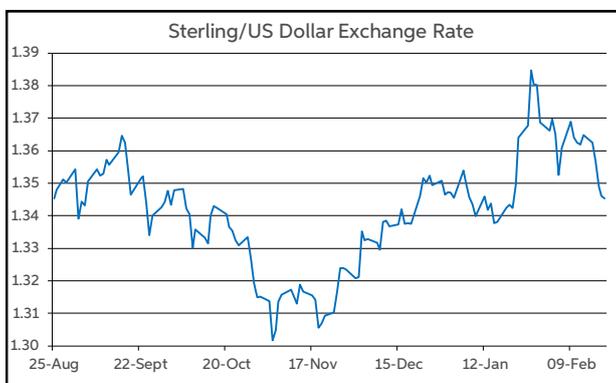

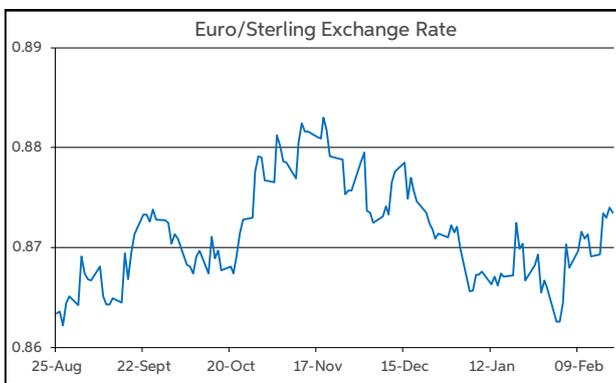

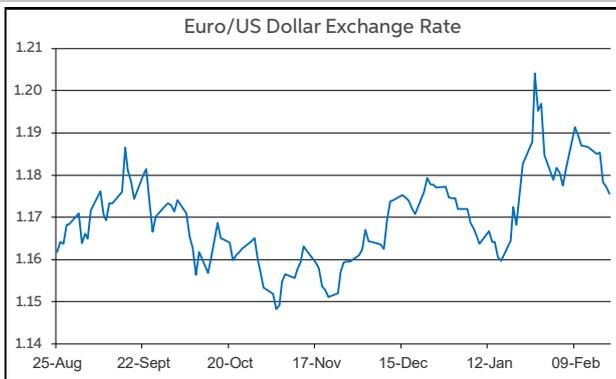

Data-wise, the latest US weekly initial jobless claims figure (206k vs. 225k) and the Philly Fed Index (16.3 vs. 8.5) both beat the consensus. In contrast, Eurozone consumer confidence improved but printed below expectations in February (-12.2 vs. -11.8 f'cast). Meanwhile, on the monetary policy front, Fed President Kashkari indicated that he is of the view that US interest rates are near the neutral level, suggesting the scope for further easing may be limited.

As investors continued to digest the hawkish Fed meeting minutes released late on Wednesday, the dollar stayed on the front-foot yesterday. The greenback received fresh impetus from the aforementioned US data and from Kashkari's remarks. Elsewhere, sterling was under some slight downward pressure, albeit the pound regained its losses overnight

In level terms, the firmer tone to dollar is evidenced by EUR/USD opening this morning back at the midpoint of $1.17-1.18. GBP/USD is operating down at the halfway mark of $1.34-1.35. Meantime, EUR/GBP remains in the lower half of the 87-88p range.

Already this morning, UK retail sales for January have been released. Sales jumped by 1.8% in the month, well above expectations for just a 0.2% rise. Later today, the flash PMIs for February in the Eurozone, UK and US are due. A busy US data schedule also includes the first reading of GDP for Q4 and core-PCE inflation for December.
