

US CPI the main release this week

It was an interesting week on financial markets to start the new year. Early in the week, equity markets moved higher across the board, as investors bought into the idea that the economic impact of the Omicron variant should be less severe than previous Covid waves. However, on Wednesday risk appetite soured following the release of the latest Fed meeting minutes, which were much more hawkish than anticipated. Stock markets on both sides of the Atlantic ended the week below where they started it.

On bond markets, yields were pushed higher by a hardening of rate hike expectations in the US, UK and Eurozone. The hawkish tone in the minutes provided added impetus for yields to continue rising also. The key 10Yr US Treasury yield rose by circa 25bps on the week, with yields in Europe rising by 15-20bps. However, the action on currency markets was much more muted. Of the limited moves, sterling gained 0.7% versus the euro and the dollar.

In level terms, the slightly firmer tone to sterling sees EUR/GBP start this week at the midpoint of the 83-84p range. Meantime, GBP/USD is changing hands in the top half of $1.35-1.36. EUR/USD is currently operating near the heart of the $1.13-1.14 band.

This week, the main data highlights are once again from the US. CPI inflation for December will garner close attention, with both the headline and core rates set to rise further. US retail sales and industrial production (Dec) are also due.

In the UK, the monthly reading of GDP is expected to show the economy regained some momentum in November. Meanwhile, industrial production, unemployment and German GDP data will all feature in the Eurozone.
