

Dollar remains on the back-foot

There was a somewhat mixed tone to sentiment yesterday, as US markets returned from a long weekend and investors continued to digest a slew of executive orders from President Trump. Having edged higher on Monday, the Euro Stoxx 50 finished flat yesterday. Meantime on Wall Street, the mood was more upbeat, with the S&P 500 gaining 0.9%.

On the currency front, the price action was limited throughout the European session. Of the scant developments to note yesterday, the dollar remained under some downward pressure. A relatively quiet data calendar likely contributed to the muted moves. Indeed, although the main release of note, the German ZEW for January printed well below the consensus (10.3 vs. 15.3 f'cast), it had no major impact on the euro.

Overnight the greenback remained on the back-foot. Overall the dollar has declined by around 0.4% versus the euro and sterling in the past 24 hours. Meanwhile, EUR/GBP has been very tightly range bound, while the yen has edged slightly lower across the board.

In level terms, the softer tone to the dollar sees EUR/USD open this morning up above the $1.04 threshold. Meantime, GBP/USD is changing hands in the $1.23-1.24 trading band. EUR/GBP remains in and around the midpoint of the 84-85p corridor. Elsewhere, USD/JPY is in the upper half of ¥155-156.

Turning to the day ahead, the macro calendar is rather sparse once again. However, remarks from ECB President Lagarde may garner some interest later today. At the same time, investors will keep one eye on potential developments from Washington.
