

EUR/USD just above $1.17

The mixed tone to sentiment persisted yesterday, as investors continued to digest letters issued to a number of countries outlining higher trade tariffs on exports to the US, if trade deals cannot be agreed by 1st August. Amid reports that the EU will not receive a letter setting out higher tariffs, the Euro Stoxx 50 gained 0.6%. Meantime, speaking after the European close, President Trump threatened to levy higher tariffs on copper and pharmaceuticals. Against this backdrop, the S&P 500 was 0.1% lower at the close on Wall Street, having traded sideways for most of yesterday.

On bond markets, benchmark sovereign yields continued to rise across the board, led higher by the longer-end of the curves. Overall, 30-year US Treasury, German Bund and UK Gilt yields moved 2-6bps higher yesterday. A chunky slate of new issuance and ongoing concerns regarding the fiscal outlook in many advanced economies likely contributed to the rise. Meantime, oil prices continued to increase, with Brent crude up by circa 1% to around $70 per barrel.

On the currency front, the yen remained on the defensive yesterday. At the same time, the dollar was holding a slightly firmer tone. This saw the greenback gain between 0.2-0.6% versus the euro, sterling and yen.

In level terms, EUR/USD opens today in the lower half of $1.17-1.18, having traded to a low of $1.1683 yesterday. GBP/USD is operating just below the $1.36 mark. Elsewhere, USD/JPY is up near the ¥147 threshold. EUR/GBP remains in the bottom half of 86-87p.

Turning to the day ahead, the macro calendar is sparse once again. Indeed, the only release of any note will be the latest Fed FOMC meeting minutes from the end of June. However, the minutes are likely to be stale, given the recent remarks from Fed Chair Powell and other Fed officials, meaning the market impact is likely to be limited.
