

Positive tone to risk appetite, dollar modestly softer

There was a positive tone to risk appetite yesterday. This was especially noticeable on European markets which was attributed to optimism that a trade deal/framework will be agreed between the EU and US. The Euro Stoxx 50 gained 1.4%. Meanwhile, at the closing bell on Wall Street last night, the S&P 500 was up by a still solid, but more modest 0.6% on the day.

Yesterday's data and event calendar was very quiet and uninspiring. The only noteworthy item was the release of the Fed minutes from their June meeting. However, subsequent to this meeting, we have had Fed Chair Powell's semi-annual testimony and appearance at the ECB central banking forum as well as a steady flow of FOMC members speeches. Therefore, the minutes were already 'dated' before they had been published and offered little new insight.

The lack of any top tier data or events meant there was little to provide direction to currency markets. Indeed, the main pairs were confined to narrow ranges yesterday. This pattern has generally continued in overnight trading on Asia-Pacific markets.

As a result, most of the majors open this morning showing minimal changes over the last 24 hours, with the dollar holding a mildly softer tone. EUR/USD had another brief test below $1.17 yesterday, but starts today up nearer to the midpoint of $1.17-1.18. EUR/GBP has held onto the 86p mark, trading in a tight 86-86.3p range. GBP/USD is changing hands just above the $1.36 handle. The yen has steadied after recent weakness, with USD/JPY in the lower half of ¥146-147.

Looking ahead to today's macro diary, it is another quiet day in terms of data releases. Both the Eurozone and UK calendars are very sparse. Meanwhile, in the US, the only release of note is the weekly jobless claims data. It will provide a timely update on the performance of the US labour market.
