

EUR/USD starts the week below $1.09

Last week was a tumultuous one on markets. Concerns of a potential escalation in trade tensions between the US and China, a major tech outage, and a flurry of Q2 earnings reports all impacted sentiment throughout the week. Overall, the Euro Stoxx 50 shed circa 4%, while the S&P 500 lost 2%. The ECB decision to leave policy on hold had little impact on markets. The main overarching message from the meeting was that the ECB remains data dependent and that the next meeting in September is “wide-open”.

Currency-wise, the dollar was under some downward pressure in the middle of the week. Meantime, sterling was supported by sticky wage and services inflation. This saw GBP/USD register a fresh YTD high of $1.3044. At the same time, EUR/USD rose to a peak of $1.0948. Meanwhile, amid speculation of further intervention from Japanese authorities, USD/JPY fell to ¥155.4. However, the dollar recouped its losses and gained the ascendancy as risk appetite soured heading into the weekend. President Biden’s decision to drop out of the US election has not impacted the dollar thus far.

As trading gets underway this morning, EUR/USD is operating back below the $1.09 threshold. GBP/USD is changing hands in the lower half of the $1.29-1.30 corridor. Meantime, EUR/GBP is trading up above the 84p handle. USD/JPY is in the upper half of the ¥156-157 range.

Turning to the week ahead, the highlight of a busy US data calendar will be the June reading of core-PCE inflation. The first reading of GDP for Q2 will also garner attention. In terms of more timely data, the flash PMIs for July in the US, Eurozone and UK are due. Elsewhere, a raft of other Eurozone survey data for July will be released.
