

BoE hints at possibility of a June rate cut

The highlight of Thursday's macro diary was the BoE meeting for May. As widely expected, the central bank left the key interest rate unchanged at 5.25%. However, the BoE espoused a dovish tone. Indeed, Governor Bailey did not rule out a rate cut at its next meeting on June 20th. He commented that by this meeting, the BoE would have two full sets of data, which would include two months of inflation numbers. He also noted that the BoE may need to cut rates by more than is currently priced in by markets.

Market rate expectations though were not overly impacted by Governor Baileys comments or the dovish tone of the meeting statement/minutes. Futures contracts pricing continues to indicate that the market views August as the more likely timing of the first rate cut from the BoE. There is around 60bps of cuts priced in by year end.

Currency-wise, there was some initial downward pressure on sterling during the BoE press conference but this proved to be short lived. Instead, over the past 24 hours, the dollar is marginally lower against both the euro and sterling. The greenback was not helped by a negative surprise in the weekly jobless claims numbers. The EUR/USD pair edged higher into the upper half of $1.07-1.08, while GBP/USD regained the $1.25 handle. Meanwhile, EUR/GBP continued to change hands in and around the 86p level.

The UK remains in focus today with the early morning release of Q1 GDP. It showed that the economy returned to growth in the quarter, rising by a better than expected 0.6% q/q (vs. f'cast for 0.4%). The news has provided a supportive start to this morning's FX session for sterling. Later today, the ECB meeting account and US consumer sentiment (May) are the main releases of note.
