

EUR/USD remains near $1.16

Investor sentiment was holding a cautious tone yesterday, amid conflicting headlines regarding the war in the Middle East and some mixed PMI data. Initially, reports suggested that disagreement regarding Iran's nuclear programme may curtail any deal to end the war in the Middle East. However, constructive remarks from US officials helped soothe the market angst later in the day. Meanwhile on the data front, the flash PMIs deteriorated sharply in the Eurozone and the UK in May, weighed down by the services sector. In contrast, the US PMIs indicated that activity levels increased in the month.

Overall though, Brent crude moved slightly lower yesterday, to back near $103 per barrel. Meantime on equity markets, the Euro Stoxx 50 fell by 0.3%. However, on Wall Street, the S&P 500 edged 0.2% higher. Elsewhere, market rate expectations softened modestly in the Eurozone and the UK, following the release of the aforementioned weak PMI data.

Against this backdrop, both the euro and sterling were on the defensive. However, the moves were relatively small overall. As trading gets underway this morning, EUR/USD opens back near the $1.16 mark, having tested below that level once again. Meantime, GBP/USD is changing hands in the lower half of $1.33-1.34. EUR/GBP continues to operate at the midpoint of the 86-87p corridor.

Already this morning, UK retail sales figures for April have been released. Headline sales declined by 1.3% in the month, partly due to a sharp drop in fuel sales as prices spiked. The data has not impacted sterling so far in early trading. Later today, the bellwether German Ifo and the University of Michigan measure of US consumer sentiment will feature. On the monetary policy front, remarks from a number of central bankers, including ECB President Lagarde will warrant attention. Investors will also be keeping a close eye on developments in the Middle East.
