

EUR/GBP back above 88p

There was a mixed mood on markets yesterday. This was reflected by the Euro Stoxx 50 gaining 1.1%, supported in part by some strong company earnings reports. In contrast, the S&P 500 struggled for momentum amid lingering concerns of stretched valuations for AI-related firms. The index rallied late on to register a meagre 0.2% rise.

Meantime on bond markets, UK Gilt yields fell by 7-8bps along the curve yesterday, due to a softening in UK rate expectations following a soft labour market report for September/October. Market pricing indicates that it now attaches around a 75% chance of a BoE rate cut in December, and a total of 65bps of policy easing is expected by the end of 2026. Elsewhere, German Bund yields inched 2-3bps lower. US Treasury markets were closed for Veteran's Day.

Data-wise, aside from the aforementioned early UK labour market release, the macro calendar was relatively light. In Germany, the ZEW economic sentiment indicator deteriorated slightly to 38.5 (vs. 41.0 f'cast) in November. Meanwhile, US small business optimism edged marginally lower to 98.2 in October, from 98.8. However, neither release had a major impact on the euro or the dollar yesterday.

On the currency front, sterling was under some modest downward pressure yesterday, owing to the softening in UK market rates. Elsewhere, there was affirmer tone to the euro. As trading gets underway this morning, this sees EUR/GBP open above the 88p mark. Meantime EUR/USD is changing hands in the top half of $1.15-1.16. GBP/USD is near the midpoint of the $1.31-1.32 corridor.

Turning to the day ahead, the macro calendar is sparse on both sides of the Atlantic. Meanwhile, remarks from a number of Fed officials will warrant some attention. However, the main focus will likely be on efforts to end the US government shutdown. The House of Representatives may vote on a funding bill to end it as soon as today.
