

EUR/USD at fresh YTD low of $1.055

There was a cautious tone to investor sentiment yesterday, amid choppy trading conditions. This saw the Euro Stoxx 50 fall by 0.1%, while the S&P 500 rebounded late on to finish flat for the day. Data-wise, the release of US CPI inflation for October led to some volatility on markets, despite matching expectations. The headline rate rose to 2.6%, while the latter remained at 3.3%.

However, in the initial aftermath of the release of the CPI data, US Treasury yields moved sharply lower along the curve, and US futures contracts softened somewhat. Overnight though, longer-dated US Treasury yields have risen once again. This has coincided with confirmation that the Republicans have kept control of the House of Representatives, and with some hawkish comments from Fed officials. Overall, the 2-year US Treasury yield declined by circa 4bps yesterday, while the 10 & 30 year yields rose by 3-6bps.

Against this backdrop, there was some volatility in the dollar. The greenback was on the defensive early on, as US market rate expectations softened. However, the dollar re-took the ascendancy later in the European session, and remained to the fore overnight. Amid the firmer tone to the dollar, EUR/USD registered a fresh YTD low of $1.055.

As trading gets underway this morning, EUR/USD remains pinned down at the $1.055 mark. Meantime, GBP/USD is operating back below the $1.27 threshold. EUR/GBP continues to change hands in the bottom half of 83-84p.

Today, the main highlight will be the release of the ECB monetary policy meeting account from October. Elsewhere, comments from a number of central bank officials will also be in the spotlight.
