

UK Budget in focus today

The more positive mood on markets persisted yesterday. The Euro Stoxx 50 rose by 0.8%. Meantime, the S&P 500 rallied late on to register a solid 0.9% gain, despite some weak US consumer/labour market data weighing on sentiment early on. On bond markets, benchmark sovereign yields declined by 1-3bps across the board.

US retail sales rose by just 0.2% in September (vs. +0.4% f'cast), while the control group measure of sales (a key core sales metric), unexpectedly contracted by 0.1% in the month. At the same time, the Conference Board survey of US consumer confidence deteriorated to 88.7 in November (vs. 93.3 f'cast). The index is now at its lowest level since April. Meanwhile, the new ADP Pulse Survey - which has garnered increasing levels of attention recently due to the lack of official labour market data - indicated that the US economy shed 13.5k private jobs on average per week up to the start of November.

Currency-wise, the dollar was under some downward pressure following the release of the data. The greenback fell by around 0.5% against the euro and sterling. Elsewhere, there was a slightly firmer tone to sterling yesterday, albeit the pound handed back most of its gains overnight.

In level terms, this sees EUR/USD open this morning up in the top half of the $1.15-1.16 range. GBP/USD is operating in the upper regions of the $1.31-1.32 band. USD/JPY is below the midpoint of ¥156-157. EUR/GBP is changing hands just below the 88p mark.

Today, the main focus will be on the UK Budget. Expectations are that the Chancellor will opt to make a number of minor tax rises to boost the fiscal headroom for next year. However, income tax increases are no longer anticipated. The OBR forecasts on the fiscal/economic outlook will also garner close attention. The Budget poses some event risk for sterling.
