

Subdued mood on markets

There was a generally subdued mood to risk appetite yesterday. Investors were keeping a close eye on the Middle East amid ongoing concerns over the risk of a further escalation in the conflict. Meantime, the macro data diary was lacking in 'top tier' releases on both sides of the Atlantic.

Against this backdrop, on equity markets, the S&P 500 was 1% lower at the closing bell on Wall Street last night. Meanwhile, oil prices continued to move higher, with Brent crude up around 4%, to above $80 per barrel.

On bond markets, yields were on an upward trajectory. The 10-year yields on the main sovereign benchmarks were up by between 3-8bps. This included the 10-year US Treasury yield rising back above 4%, continuing its upward momentum that was underpinned by last Friday's consensus beating payrolls data.

Currency-wise, the majors were contained within relatively tight ranges yesterday. This has continued in overnight Asia-Pacific trading. Of the modest moves to register over the past 24 hours, sterling has retained its softer tone from last week.

This is reflected in EUR/GBP edging up nearer to the 84p threshold. At the same time, GBP/USD has been unable to hold onto the $1.31 mark. Elsewhere, EUR/USD continues to change hands below $1.10, confined to a narrow $1.095-1.099 range.

Ahead today, the macro data calendar remains sparse. US small business optimism (Sept) is one of the few highlights. Therefore, geopolitical newsflow may be the main potential source of any directional impact for investor sentiment.
