

Some volatility amongst the FX majors

While gold prices made plenty of headlines last week, reaching a record high above $4,000/oz, it was also an eventful period on currency markets. There were some notable changes in trading levels/ranges amongst the FX majors. From a euro perspective, the single currency started the week under some mild downward pressure amid renewed political uncertainty in France. Even more notable, in terms of a weakening trend, was the Japanese yen. The currency was on the defensive as the market speculated that the new leader of the main ruling LDP party, Sanae Takaichi, apparent preference for fiscal stimulus and looser monetary policy could delay BoJ rate hikes.

In contrast, the dollar was on an upward trajectory for much of the week. The greenback managed to take advantage of the other 'majors' difficulties and generate some upward momentum. In level terms, this was reflected in EUR/USD falling from above $1.17 at the start of the week, to trade to a low of $1.154. The combination of the firmer dollar and weaker yen saw USD/JPY test above ¥153. The stronger dollar was also evident in GBP/USD moving under $1.33.

However, an escalation of trade tensions between the US and China on Friday saw the dollar lose some momentum heading into the weekend. As trading gets underway this morning, EUR/USD opens back above $1.16, GBP/USD is up in $1.33-1.34 territory, while USD/JPY is below ¥152. Elsewhere on the currency front, EUR/GBP is at the 87p mark after spending some of last week under this level.

Ahead this week, the official data releases from the US calendar remain impacted by the government shutdown. The Eurozone diary is sparse, with industrial production the only data of note. There is a much busier UK schedule. Monthly GDP and a raft of labour market data (all Aug) will bring the UK economy's performance into focus and therefore, could create some volatility for sterling.
