

Firmer tone to risk appetite

There was an improvement in investor sentiment to start the week yesterday. This followed a risk averse end to last week which saw the S&P 500 fall by over 2% on Friday. This sell-off occurred amid an escalation of trade tensions between the US and China. However, some less confrontational language from the White House over the weekend helped to ease concerns, for now, over a full blown trade war between the world's two largest economies.

The firming in risk appetite was reflected in gains for the main equity indices on both sides of the Atlantic. In Europe, the Euro Stoxx rose by 0.7%. Meanwhile, at the close on Wall Street last night, the S&P 500 was 1.6% higher on the day.

From a currency perspective, the action amongst the FX majors has been confined to relatively narrow ranges. Within this though, the dollar regained some of the momentum it had lost on Friday. The greenback was supported by the aforementioned easing of concerns over the risks of a more damaging US-China trade conflict. Those worries had knocked some of the wind out of the dollar's sails heading into the weekend.

In level terms, EUR/USD starts today back below the $1.16 threshold. Meanwhile the GBP/USD pair is changing hands at the lower end of the $1.33-1.34 trading band. Elsewhere on the currency front, the EUR/GBP pair has been straddling the 87p threshold for much of the past 24 hours and starts today's European session at this mark.

Already this morning, we have got some important UK labour markets updates for the three months to August. This included the unemployment rate, which rose unexpectedly to 4.8% (forecast was for an unchanged 4.7%). The main highlights from the remainder of today's macro diary is the German ZEW investor survey (Oct) and US small business optimism (Sept).
