

ECB cuts rates by 25bps

In line with market expectations, the ECB lowered official interest rates by 25bps yesterday. The decision was unanimous, and it marked the first time the ECB had cut rates at consecutive meetings in 13 years. At the post-meeting press conference President Lagarde emphasised that the ECB remains data dependent. However, the overarching tone of the meeting statement/press conference suggest that the ECB will cut rates again in December, unless inflation and activity data print to the upside of expectations.

In the initial aftermath of the policy announcement, the euro came under some downward pressure. During the aforementioned press conference the single currency lost further ground. Elsewhere on the currency front, the yen was on the back-foot, while the dollar was holding a slightly firmer tone. The dollar strength was on the back of strong retail sales data, with the headline measure rising by 0.4% in September (vs. +0.3% f'cast), while the control group metric increased by 0.7% (vs. +0.3% f'cast). However, the dollar handed back some of its gains overnight.

Already this morning, UK retail sales data for September have been released. Both the headline and core rates rose by 0.3%, well above the consensus for a fall of 0.3% in each metric. Sterling has been on the front foot in early trading following the release.

The firmer tone to sterling in early trading and the softer euro over the past 24 hours is evidenced by EUR/GBP operating back near to 83p. At the same time, EUR/USD opens this morning in the lower half of the $1.08-1.09 range. Meanwhile, GBP/USD is changing hands in the top half of $1.30-1.31, having spent the majority of yesterday in and around the $1.30 handle. USD/JPY is up near the ¥150 mark. The remainder of today's calendar is relatively quite.
