

Another quiet day on markets

It was another relatively quiet day across financial markets yesterday. On equity markets, the Euro Stoxx 50 finished flat for the day, while at the close on Wall Street, the S&P 500 was up 0.4%. Meanwhile, having moved higher earlier in the week, bond yields edged lower, most notably at the front end of the curve in the UK and Eurozone. Currency-wise, the main FX pairs remained range bound on the exchanges.

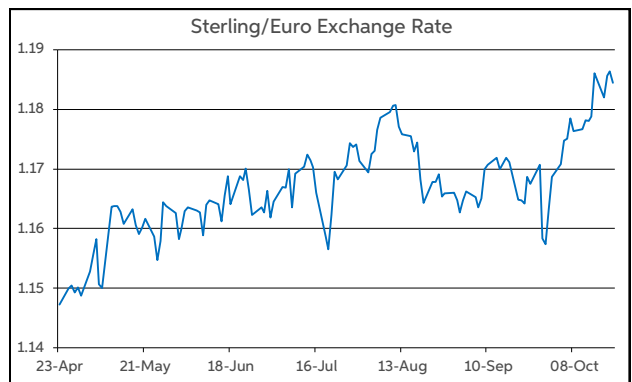

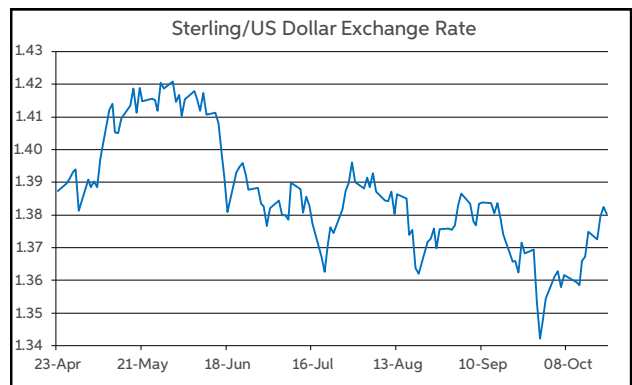

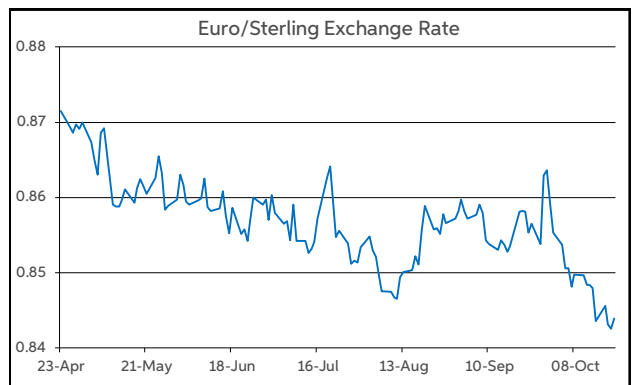

A sparse data calendar likely contributed to the narrow price action on currency markets. The only release of note, the final reading of HICP inflation in the Eurozone, confirmed prices were 3.4% higher on a year-on-year basis in September. However, the lagged nature of the release meant it did not impact the euro.

In level terms, the key currency pairs open at very similar levels to 24 hours ago. This is reflected in EUR/USD starting once again this morning at the midpoint of the $1.16-1.17 range. EUR/GBP is changing hands in the bottom half of the 84-85p corridor. Meantime, GBP/USD is operating at the $1.38 handle.

Turning to the day ahead, there is a busier look to the data schedule on both sides of the Atlantic. From a euro viewpoint, the flash reading of consumer confidence for October is forecast to decline slightly.

Meanwhile, from a dollar perspective, existing home sales (September) and the Philly Fed manufacturing index (October) will be released. The latest weekly initial jobless claims figures are also due. However, bar any major surprises, the data is unlikely to impact the majors.
