

US CPI inflation in focus today

Investor sentiment was holding a cautious tone yesterday. This was evident in equity markets handing back some of their gains from the day before. In Europe, the Euro Stoxx 50 fell by 0.3%. On Wall Street, the S&P 500 was 0.6% lower at the closing bell last night. Meantime, on bond markets, the action was relatively muted. Although, UK Gilt yields continued to trend lower. Elsewhere, oil prices remained on an upward trajectory, with Brent crude trading up to $92 per barrel.

Currency-wise, the main pairs were confined to fairly tight ranges yesterday. This was not overly surprising, as aside from the 7am publication of a batch of UK labour market updates, the remainder of Tuesday's macro diary was generally quiet.

Of the limited FX moves to register over the past 24 hours, sterling is somewhat weaker against the backdrop of lower UK yields. As trading gets underway this morning, EUR/GBP is changing hands above the 86p mark, while GBP/USD is operating below the $1.25 threshold. Meantime, EUR/USD is in the lower half of $1.07-1.08.

Today's macro calendar features some important updates. Indeed, already this morning, we have got UK GDP figures for July. The economy contracted by 0.5% in the month, which weaker than expectations for a 0.2% decline. The disappointing GDP data has seen sterling remain on the defensive this morning.

Later today, we get US CPI inflation numbers for August. The data will form a key input into the Fed's policy deliberations at its meeting next week (Sept 19th/20th). The consensus forecast is for headline inflation to accelerate from 3.2% to 3.6%. Meanwhile, the core rate is expected to ease from 4.7% to 4.3%.
