

Fed cuts rates by 50bps

Overnight, the US Fed cut rates for the first time since 2020, lowering the Funds target range by 50bps to 4.75-5.00%. In recent weeks there has been uncertainty as to whether the Fed would cut rates by 25 or 50bps. In explaining the decision to opt for the larger cut, Chair Powell noted that, “the upside risks to inflation have diminished and the downside risks to employment have increased”.

Both the meeting statement and the updated interest rate dotplot projections released by the Fed indicate that further easing can be expected between now and the end of 2025. The dotplot suggest that rates will end this year between 4.25-4.50%, before being lowered to 3.25-3.50% by end 2025. However, at the press conference Chair Powell struck a somewhat less dovish tone, suggesting that the Fed is unlikely to continue to cut in 50bps clips.

Currency-wise, the Fed policy decision and press conference were sources of volatility for the dollar. In the initial aftermath of the policy announcement, the dollar softened, with EUR/USD rising to a high of $1.119. However, the greenback recouped its losses, amid the aforementioned remarks from Chair Powell. Elsewhere, sterling was holding a firmer tone yesterday. As trading gets underway this morning, EUR/USD opens in the lower half of $1.11-1.12. Meantime, GBP/USD is operating above $1.32. EUR/GBP is back near to 84p.

Turning to the day ahead, the monetary policy spotlight will shift to the BoE policy announcement. The BoE cut rates in August by 25bps in a very close 5-4 decision. Since then though, officials have been coy regarding the potential for further easing this month. Thus, market expectations are for no changes to Bank rate today. However, the meeting statement will be in focus, as investors look for guidance in relation to the future path of policy.
