

US labour market report in focus this week

Last week, the announcement of a significant stimulus package in China, as well as weak PMI data and cooling inflation in the Eurozone, had a major impact on markets. Against this backdrop, the CSI 300 (a major Chinese stock market index) registered its best week since 2008, rising by 15.7%. At the same time, the Euro Stoxx 50 gained 4%, while the S&P 500 edged just 0.6% higher.

The Euro Stoxx 50 enjoyed spillover effects from the rally in Chinese equities, but it was also propelled upwards by a softening in Eurozone rate expectations. Amid some poor PMI data (the Eurozone composite index moved back into contraction mode) and a sharp fall in both French and Spanish inflation (to 1.5% and 1.7%, respectively), the market is now almost fully pricing in two 25bps rate cuts by the ECB in Q4.

Currency-wise the dollar was under some downward pressure last week. At the same time, the euro was also on the defensive. This saw sterling (+0.5%) and the yen (+1.5%) record gains against both the greenback and the single currency.

As trading gets under way this morning, EUR/GBP is operating in the bottom half of 83-84p, while GBP/USD is just below the $1.34 mark. Meantime, USD/JPY is back below the ¥142 threshold. EUR/USD is in the top half of the $1.11-1.12 corridor.

Turning to the week ahead, the main release of note will be the US labour market report for September. Softer conditions in the labour market were a major factor that led the Fed to opt for a bumper 50bps rate cut earlier this month, so the data pose some event risk for US market rate expectations and the dollar. Elsewhere, in the Eurozone, the flash reading of HICP inflation for September is due.
